

Tip #1: Finding Sheds in Bedding Areas

Whitetail deer drop their antlers once a year, usually in late winter and right around February.

One of the best places to find antler sheds are in a buck's bedroom - his bedding area. Look for trails that head into areas that are thick with trees and brush.

If you're looking for the sheds of a mountain buck or any buck that lives in hilly terrain, then his bedding area can often be found on a north-facing slope, usually in an area that's really thick with trees or brush or any combination thereof.

If you're looking for the sheds of a swamp buck or any type of a flatland buck, just find the thickest, nastiest areas in that swamp or the land you're looking in and that's a great place to find sheds.

Remember, bucks like to bed in thick areas.

And of course, always look for other deer sign to know your near a bedding area, such as scat, rubs and scrapes.

Subscribe and Follow me! ...and Avoid eating "tag soup"

